We all share an interdependent world where living, learning, and working transcend traditional disciplinary, cultural and geographic borders. Becoming a Global Professional will introduce students from all majors to professional skills and qualities that will help translate academic learning into diverse and interconnected workplaces: cultural humility, resilience, adaptive thinking, and intercultural communication, among others. Such skills and qualities define global professionals and will help prepare you to make a difference and to stand out as you pursue work and/or education beyond graduation.

This one-unit seminar on Becoming a Global Professional is open to students in both the lower and upper divisions from all majors. Students who need one additional credit to qualify for summer financial aid will find this course to be a great complement to just about any course of study.
